While here Gov. Maytorena received hundreds of personal friends. He was in excellent health and spirits.

BLIND FEAR OF YAQUIS.

Basil Dillon Woon in Nogales Herald.
Tells of Calles Defeat.

Fear of the Yaquis—fear of the little brown men who boasted that they took no prisoners nor left no wounded in the field—of the guerilla fighters who did not know enough to turn back before a superior force—fear of Urbalejo, the Yaqui general—these were the causes of the retreat of the Calles forces from Masacrenas to Del Rio.

On the Cananea road Sunday afternoon, in a Stoddard-Dayton automobile, we met many small bands of Calles soldiers. Some were going forward and some back—but most were going back.

This we could not reconcile with reports given out in Nogales before we left that Calles was beating Maytorena back. It looked funny. Wagons passed us loaded with arms and ammunition. Camps by the way were filled with tents, equipment, and here and there bunches of horses, some of them with saddles but no riders.

We asked several of the soldiers we met what the reason was for the withdrawal of the supplies.

"Quien sabe?" they answered, except one, who said the order had been given for a general retirement to Agua Prieta to fortify that town against the Villistas from Chihuahua.

But the one invariable question was:

"Where is Urbalejo? Is he at the front? Is he commanding Maytorena's army?"

They wanted to know particulars about Maytorena's supplies, of his forces, of his cavalry, but most of all they wanted to know where Urbalejo, the "white Indian," was, and where his Yaquis were. It was the Yaquis they feared with a deadly fear.

Maytorena was outnumbered five to four when he started his sally out of Nogales to drive Calles back. Maytorena only had 400 men mounted on horseback; Calles had over a thousand Calles had more guns than Maytorena; more ammunition; more men; more supplies of everything, including food. He had a whole train loaded with flour and beans. He had a train made into a hospital for the receipt and care of wounded, under competent American doctors. He had the wherewithal to drive Maytorena back to Nogales and then to take the town.

Why did he not do it, then? Because he counted without the fear of his men for the Indians—that's the reason.

The Yaquis saw blood in this battle of Martinez. They slaughtered their prisoners; they slaughtered the wounded of the enemy. They were asked how many prisoners they had taken. "Oh, eighteen or twenty" they answered at one time.

What had they done with them? Where were the prisoners? They had been given their liberty! Verily, it was liberty they were given! Liberty in the shape of a mauser bullet.

This, then, was the reason for the rout of the Calles forces—and it was a rout. Armies do not jump fifty miles in one day on an ordinary retreat. Half of the Calles army is lost; nobody knows where it is. Some of them were driven off into Lauris pass; these have arrived, but hundreds are still unaccounted for. Dozens of places on the way offered splendid opportunities for defense, yet none was offered. All the fight has left the Calles army, and they are going back to Agua Prieta a beaten body of men.

I have mentioned this unreasoning, blind fear of the Yaquis as the chief reason for the retreat, and it was. But there is another reason why the Calles forces did not make the showing they were expected to make. The artillery was a disappointment. The only execution they did was with their machine guns and rifles; their shrapnel did no harm at all except to kill a few horses and cattle.

Shrapnel is not meant for guerilla fighting. Of what use to burst a shell over a field when you cannot see any one there to shoot at? There were no fortifications to fire at. Maytorena's Yaquis got behind trees and rocks. Each fired in his chosen spot until his cartridges gave out, and then went back for more and took up a new position. Shells burst everywhere, but in no case could the shrapnel have killed more than one man, and as it happened it did not kill any. Shrapnel is meant for trench and fortification fighting, not for guerilla warfare.

FIRE PROTECTION.

The American fire waste averages $250,000,000.00 per year. This is $3,000.00 per hour, or $500.00 per minute, and does not include the cost of fire departments.

The fire insurance companies collect premiums and pay losses, and carelessness on the part of the people will cause more fires, resulting in higher insurance rates. We are striving for a lower rate on fire insurance in Nogales, and if all citizens will give careful consideration to their own fire risk and fire protection on our FIRE PROTECTION DAY, Saturday October 9, 1915, you will help the cause of lower rates and may at the same time avoid a fire in your own property or that of your neighbor.

Respectfully,
BRACEY CURTIS,
Chief, Nogales Fire Dept.
